

Executive Director

The Jewish Holocaust Museum and Research Centre is dedicated to the memory of the six million Jews who were murdered between 1933 and 1945. Its exhibitions, testimonies and educational programs aim to combat anti-Semitism, racism and prejudice in the community and foster understanding between all people.

In this newly revised position, reporting to the Board, you will manage all business and operations aspects of the organisation, and lead a highly competent team of specialists and volunteers in Education, Exhibitions and Community Relations. Your specific responsibilities will include strategy and policy development; finance and administration; HR management and team leadership, and stakeholder engagement.

For this pivotal role you must have management experience at a comparable level and skills in financial management. You should be able to build effective relationships through positive communication and interaction, with a sensitivity to the survivor community and their families.

If you've been searching for a role with values and meaning please send your application or call Philip Mayers in strict confidence.
